Petroleum Aide Says Fuel Oil Not Smog Cause

An oil-industry air-pollution expert believes fuel-oil burning does not cause smog and that the greatest hope for the solution to smog is an afterburner for automobile exhaust.

James W. Daily, supervisor, air-pollution control, Standard Oil Co. of California, Western Operations, Inc., and a member of the technical subcommittee on air-pollution control, Western Oil and Gas Association, told the National Supply Co. Management Club of Torrance Wednesday that evidence points to the automobile as a chief smog culprit.

Daily reviewed activities of the petroleum industry in their 12-year fight against smog and said the industry is continuing to provide manpower, gasoline for experimentation, research facilities, and cooperation in continuing studies of air pollution.

He urged the county Board of Supervisors, the Public Health Department, the state Legislature and the public to give all the backing they can to development of an afterburner.

Daily said the California State Department of Health is setting clean air standards. He said the answer to fuel-oil burning is a mandatory switch from fuel oil to the year round when sulfur dioxide levels get close to the standards set by the Public Health Department.

He is a past director of the Chamber of Commerce, past president of the Rotary Club, and is a director of the Torrance Memorial Hospital and the Executives' Dinner Club. He also has served on the board of governors of the YMCA and as city chairman of the Community Chest.

Fred W. Mill is chairman of the event.
